Development Impact Bond (DIB)

- It is an Outcome based funding (risk bearing) instrument. Has been tried in India.
- Besides ZCZP, SEBI is considering introducing DIB in SSE.
- The main purpose of development impact bonds is to attract private investors (risk fudner) to subsidize development projects. If a project is successful, the investors are repaid by the outcome funder (a philanthropic organization). However, if the project fails, the investors do not receive anything.
- Generally, the process starts when a philanthropic organisation identifies development projects and reaches out to potential investors and agrees to repay the principal amount plus some premium to the investors if the project is successful. In addition, the service provider)NGO) who will run the project is determined.
- The parties then determine the quantifiable metrics that will measure the project's success. Interested investors inject the required capital by purchasing bonds and the service provider use the funds to finance the project.
- At the end of the fixed term, an independent evaluator performs an assessment of the project's success based on the predetermined metrics. If the project meets the criteria, the outcome funder repays the principal and premium to the investors.
